Ram Charan has successfully undergone surgery for a right wrist injury he sustained while filming Peddi, his team announced on Monday.

The operation took place at Ganga Hospital in Coimbatore, one of India's top orthopaedic facilities, under the guidance of Dr S. Rajasekaran, the hospital's chairman and a highly regarded orthopaedic surgeon.

Due to the complexity of the wrist injury, Dr Alejandro Badia, an internationally acclaimed hand and wrist surgeon from Miami, joined the surgical team to assist Dr Rajasekaran and Dr Praveen Bharadwaj.

The involvement of Dr Badia, considered one of the leading experts in hand and wrist surgery worldwide, highlights the serious approach Ram Charan's medical team took in addressing this injury.

For actors in action-packed roles, wrist injuries can pose significant challenges, as their physical performance is vital to their on-screen presence. Bringing in international expertise underscores the commitment of both the production and personal teams to ensure nothing is left to chance.

Ram Charan is recovering well, and his medical team is satisfied with the surgery's outcome. Next, he will embark on a structured rehabilitation program before getting back to work.

The injury occurred during the shooting of Peddi, directed by Buchi Babu Sana, who is known for Uppena.

In this film, Ram Charan stars alongside Janhvi Kapoor, Shiva Rajkumar, Jagapathi Babu, and Divyenndu. Produced by Venkata Satish Kilaru under Vriddhi Cinemas and presented by Mythri Movie Makers and Sukumar Writings, Peddi has already made a significant splash at the box office.

The timing of the surgery suggests that the injury was properly managed during production, turning into a medical concern only after the film's release.

At this point, there's no confirmed timeline for Ram Charan's return to filming, but the focus remains on rehabilitation. Fortunately, all indications are that the surgery went as planned.

Wishing Ram Charan a full and speedy recovery!
